detail later in this book. Here is an overview:

- The workspace consists of several panes that handle all content creation and editing. The most important of these is the `_Canvas_`, shown in Figure 4.1, which is where you create new layers and edit content for each new layer. There are also secondary

Panes for applying actions, such as adjustments and filters, and grouping layer content into a _Layer Style_, a type of composite effect. • The _Navigator_, shown in Figure 4.2, contains the image files, swatches, and other assets that are associated with the image. These are all accessed through menus, which are related to specific edits in the Canvas window. Some of these, such as the Adjustments menu, are accessed from any part of the application, but the most important ones, including the ones in the Layers panel, are accessed through menus that

Q: Recursive descent parsing with python Is there a straight forward way of implementing a recursive-descent parser

in python without resorting to building the grammar beforehand using the pyparsing tool?

A: I would suggest that you give Pyparsing a try! There are some resources on the Web regarding what a simple recursive descent parser is, and it is fairly straightforward to implement. Here is an example:

#!/usr/bin/env python
import pyparsing as pp
def make_parse(input):
Parse input using a
recursive descent parser
First we define a parse
rule that allows us to skip the initial # whitespace. #'skip'
means "ignore up to this point" skip = pp.Suppress(1) # The grammar itself is built

out of 3 rules # (everything between brackets are single characters) #
(letter|digit|'.')+ - match any number of digits or
'.' # (word|letter) +
(word|letter) - match
either a word or a letter
"start" is the root of our recursive descent tree # 'word' is simply everything but letters

(word) # 'letter' is just a simple string (letter)

start =
pp.Word(pp.alphanums + '.')("start") word =
pp.Word(pp.alphas + '_')
"digit" just looks for a single digit digit = pp.nums + '_' number = pp.Word(pp.nums + '_')
"letter" is anything but
a number or word
(period) letter =

pp.numns + '_' +
pp.nonnums letter_paren = pp.lparen letter_one = pp.Word(pp.numns + '_')
letter_pair =
pp.Word(pp.numns + '_')
(cparen | cvar | letter |
lettern | word) cparen_
